A curious example of the power of suggestion over a superstitious mind has just been told me by a man whose name is too well known to mention, says the Washington Post. He tells the story as his reason for refusing to play cards these days:

"Several years ago," says he, "I was a member of a house party at a club house in the mountains of Pennsylvania. One evening a man who made his home at the club house suggested a game of poker. We made it a fivehanded game, the ideal number for a poker game, I think, and we adjourned to the man's room to play. Besides the man who suggested the game the party was made up of his wife, who sat at his left; a lady from Washington, who sat at his right, the other man and myself. The man-I'll call him B .- was a jovial, fellow, with not an ounce of superstition in his make-up, so far as I knew. We played for an hour or so, and the deal came around to the Washington woman. She shuffled as prettily as any woman I ever saw, but as she gave the cards a fillip, the four of spades flew out of the pack, and fell to the floor at the feet of the man to own troubles trying to keep on."the left. He picked it up for her, and she said laughingly:

"You oughtn't to have picked that card up. It's the death card. It fell in your room, at your feet, and you picked up bad luck when you touched it.'

he began to lose. I was surprised to see how badly he took his luck, as we ing to run away!"-Atlanta Constituwere playing penny ante, five-cent tion. limit, and he couldn't lose but a few cents, no matter what cards he held. The Washington woman bantered him a great deal about the unlucky death card, till he grew actually peevish. Later in the game, after the deal had gone around several times, it came to him, and again the four of state have any idea of the difficulties spades fell at his feet as he shuffled experienced by those who would travthe pack.

"Worse and worse,' laughed the Washington woman. 'The death card's yours for keeps now.'

and bet all the chips he had. He won the pot on a straight, and the four of mountain passes, and to make his spades was in it. I never knew whether it was the one card he had false step would dash him to destrucdrawn that time or not, for he got tion. up from the table and refused to play any more. We joked him about 'cold | feet' and about quitting as soon as he form of a circle. These mines are had made his stake back, but he the property of the government of didn't take it in good part.
